

Introduction

Facebook is a social networking website which is developing its features constantly so that people may communicate and interact with other people regularly. As this website is widely used, concerns and questions about how much people disclose oneself to others and the extent to which they should not share with others. Moreover it is a social networking site, personality plays its role how a person portrays himself on this forum. So it raises a question is there any relation between personality and emotional self disclosure on Facebook. The Five Factor Model is mostly used to explain the different traits of personality in relation to Facebook usage. It includes Extroversion, Agreeableness, Conscientiousness, Neuroticism and Openness to experience. Mostly researchers discuss extroversion and introversion and some conclude on the same result while others contradict with the previously known results (Carr, Schrock, & Dauterman, 2012).